Over 70 participants succeeded in fostering collaboration between industry and academia with the objective to increase innovation in environmental service industries. The Winter Research Mixer held at the Halifax Club on Thursday, March 5 provided an excellent networking opportunity of researchers, business leaders and funding agencies to identify new partnerships and projects.

The evening began with two success stories of this type of integration in the Smart Harbours and coastal communities affected by climate change. It continued on with introductions to research, current business interests, support programs and the latest technology available to solve today's environmental problems. The variety of people and their continued mingling after the presentations spoke well of the winter mixer's warm reception.
